THE GAME BOARD

This is the main game board that you will be presented with when you start your game. It should be a five by six grid, with the first row containing word(s) in yellow. Everything else should be numbers in white that increase the further down you go. If everything is as described, you are able to begin playing.

CATEGORY NAME:

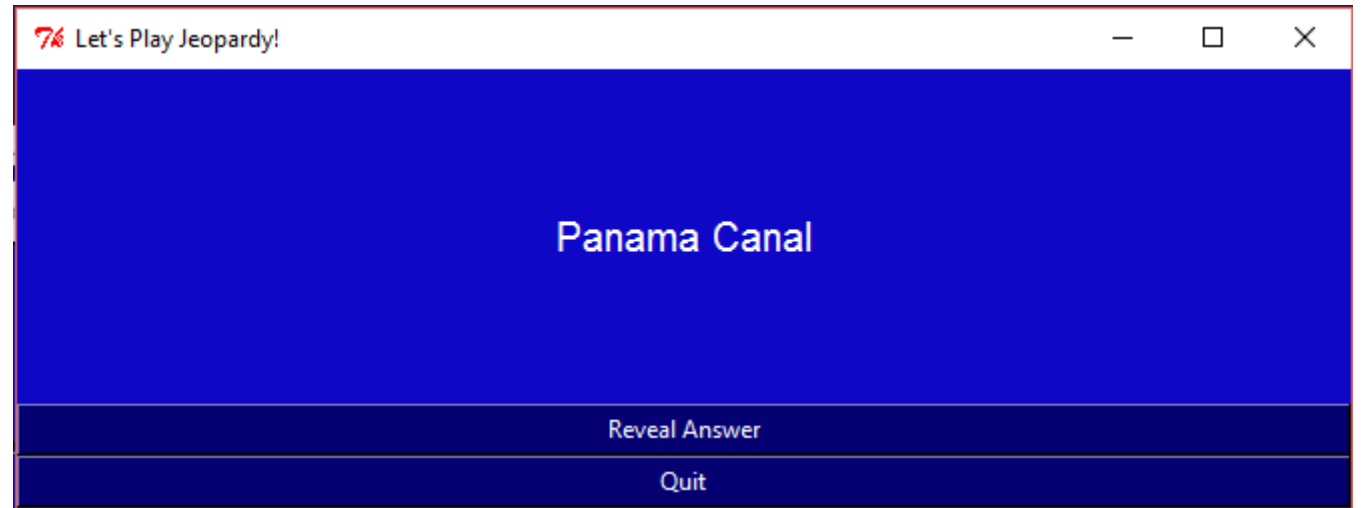

These define what the questions in this column will be about, or what the answer should be. For example, the questions in the “Presidents” category will be about presidents.

QUESTIONS:

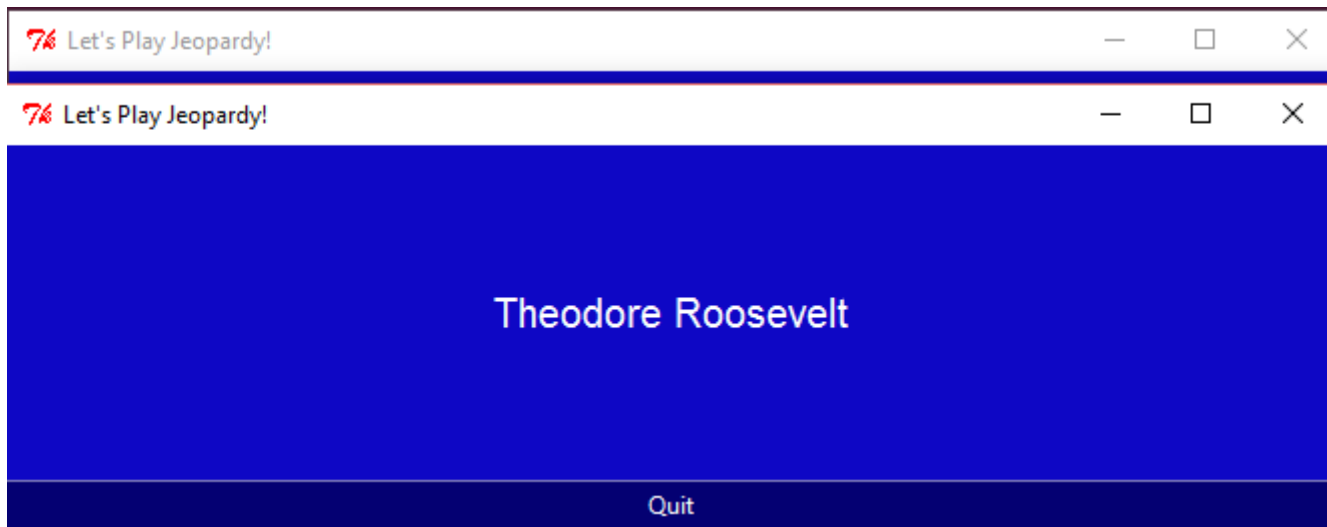

The further down you go, the more points these questions are worth. Click on the button to reveal the question.

THE QUESTION POP-UP

Upon clicking a button, a pop-up window will open with three fields (the game board is still in the background). The largest and most obvious is the question field, which will contain a word(s) that will serve as the question. You are required to think of the answer before clicking the next field, a button labeled “Reveal Answer” that will reveal the answer to the current question. There is also a third field, “Quit”, but do NOT click this until you have answered the question! So which President was related to the Panama Canal. Once you have your guess, you click “Reveal Answer”.

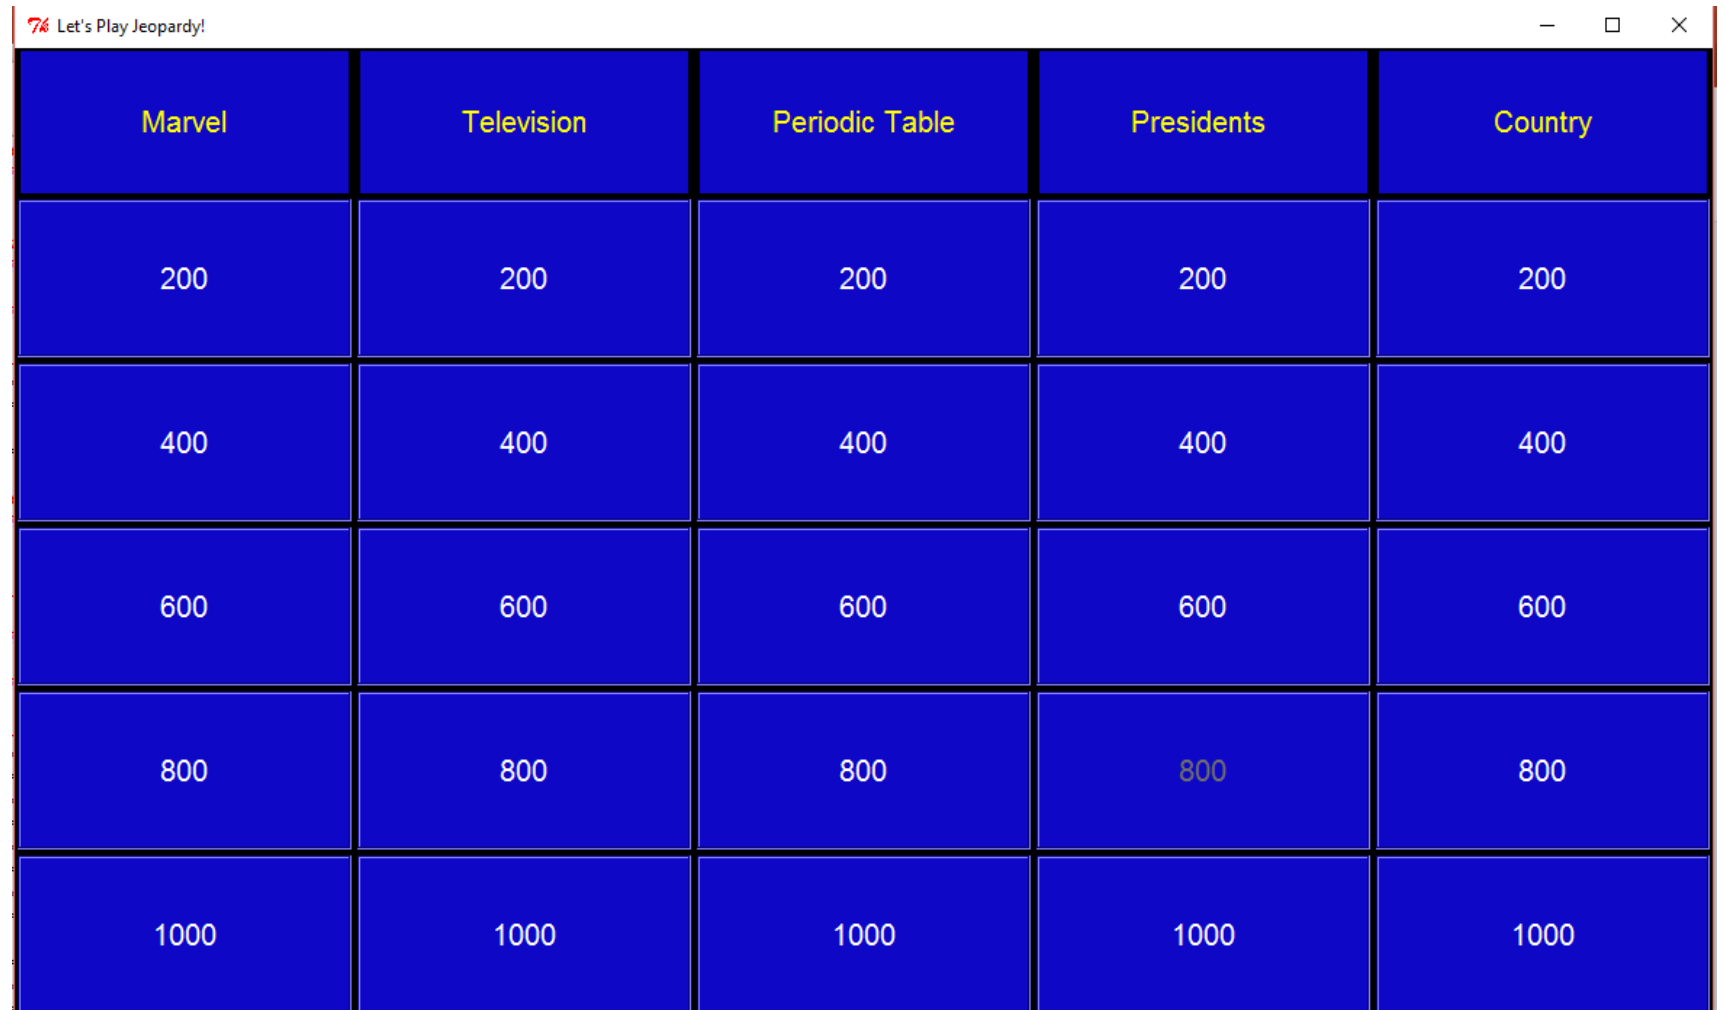

THE ANSWER POP-UP

Once you have clicked “Reveal Answer” on the Question page, you will have another pop-up that reveals the answer to the question. If you go the question correct, give yourself the points! If not, better luck with the next question. Once you have finished with this question, remember to click Quit both on this window as well as the question window.

RETURN TO GAME BOARD

Once you have clicked “quit”, you will be returned to the game board. The only difference between the game board now and the game board when you started is that the question button you clicked has been disabled, shown here with darkened numbers. This is so that the same question cannot be repeated. The game ends when the whole board has been blacked out. So grab a paper and pen for the score, and your wits for the questions, and good luck!

The screenshot shows a web browser window titled "Let's Play Jeopardy!". Inside the window is a 5x5 grid representing a Jeopardy! game board. The columns are labeled "Marvel", "Television", "Periodic Table", "Presidents", and "Country". The rows are labeled with point values: 200, 400, 600, 800, and 1000. The cell containing "800" under the "Presidents" column is highlighted with a darker blue background, indicating it has been selected or disabled.
